Obama: 'We're Not Going to Miss the Budget Deadline' (CNSNews.com) - President Barack Obama said Wednesday he hopes Congress will "have some sense of the urgency" and is "not going to miss" the deadline for meeting the president's budget request and spending caps for Fiscal Year 2013. "I hope the Congress will have some sense of the urgency here and that we are not going to miss the deadline," Obama said during remarks at the White House. "I hope they're not going to miss this deadline for themselves because, believe me, if they don't deal with it, I will keep taking actions that will - because this is necessary - keep going." Obama has said, he will only consider extending the current debt limit when the fiscal year ends, on September 30. He said Congress will have to act quickly to avoid imposing a "further spike" in the borrowing limit, which would force the country to default on the full debt. "If you can't deal with the debt limit, you shouldn't be in Congress," Obama told CNN's John King on March 18. The U.S. Treasury Department has said that starting October 1 the debt ceiling will hit $16.394 trillion, or $17.244 trillion, when combined with the $1.8 trillion, the debt limit was raised for Fiscal Year 2012, and the $1.6 trillion the nation has borrowed through February. Speaking at the White House on Wednesday, Obama said he hopes Congress will not impose higher debt limits on the American people while they are dealing with important issues, such as the "fiscal cliff." "We can't have this situation where we're forcing the American people to cut back without dealing with the debt limit," Obama said. "There's no political gain on either side of this," he added. "The point is that this country doesn't become a stronger economy by running up a trillion dollar deficit while the debt ceiling is being debated in Washington and our economy is growing at 2 percent a year." Obama has argued that a higher debt limit would be harmful to the economy. "What it would signal is that Congress is willing to sacrifice our

What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2022 ()?

The invention relates to an apparatus and a method for actuating a vacuum pump of a vehicle brake system by means of an electrical power supply of a drive motor and a controllable power supply. In automated brake systems, electrically operated vacuum pumps are required as part of the brake system. In the case of known brake systems, electric heating is used for the cooling of the drive motors. In particular, it is not possible to decrease the temperature of the drive motor by increasing its load. In addition, it is often not possible to adapt to special demands of the drive motor, in particular with regard to its thermal stability. There is a need for a device to control the temperature of the drive motor and/or the cooling of the drive motor. The invention was based on the problem of providing an apparatus and a method with which the temperature of the drive motor, and a supply of cooling fluid that is used to cool the drive motor, can be controlled. The invention is based on the prior art brake systems with manually actuatable vacuum pumps in a vehicle. A controllable power supply is used for the drive motor, and there is a controllable resistor in the connection line between the power supply and the drive motor. By means of the controllable resistor, the power supply can be switched on and switched off. The resistor is supplied with electric current by a current-controlled current source, which is controlled by means of a control signal from a control device. If the resistor is switched on, the drive motor is supplied with current and heated accordingly. The drive motor and/or the resistor and/or the respective connection line are designed such that the temperature of the drive motor can be controlled by the resistor. If the resistor is switched off, the drive motor is not supplied with current and thus is cooled accordingly. Advantageous developments of the invention are described in the dependent claims. The same current source is used for supplying the resistor for the cooling of the drive motor as is used for heating the drive motor. The invention is based on the idea that the same current-controlled current source is used for cooling the drive motor and for heating the drive motor in order to permit the temperature of the drive motor to be controlled by the resistor. This makes the system simpler. In addition, the current source need not be adapted to the different requirements of cooling the drive motor and heating the drive motor. The resistor is operated with current and can thus cool the drive motor. If the resistor is switched off, the
